darwin's ethics - moral ground- the subject of darwin's own ethics is a separate question. he was a man of rectitude, but not of faith; his rectitude wasn't grounded in piety. he couldn't be called "a spiritual" by any stretch of the term. he believed that life is a wondrous phenomenon, yes "a sublime mystery of which the first origin was unknowable to him" but that, once begun, life had proceeded over the ages ... the necessity of darwin - core - for example david quammen's superb book the reluctant mr. darwin (quammen 2006). we know, for instance, that mr. darwin's academic career had a somewhat inauspicious start, and he dropped out from his medical studies in edinburgh and just barely graduated from cambridge with qualifications that were supposed to help him on his road to becoming a
